The 1997 Report of American Voluntary Agencies Engaged in Overseas Relief and Development lists private and voluntary organizations registered with USAID as of October 1, 1996.

Overview of U.S. Voluntary Agencies: A Strengthened Partnership with USAID

Introduction

This report presents a current picture of the work being carried out by 417 private and voluntary organizations (PVOs) and cooperative development organizations (CDOs)* that were registered with the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) as of October 1, 1996. The report summarizes PVO program activities, including their geographic and sectoral focus, and their revenues and expenditures. This year's edition includes the names of executive contacts in each organization and their fax numbers and e-mail addresses.

Voluntary Agencies: A Tradition of Support for Humanitarian and Development Assistance

USAID recognizes the significant role that PVOs play in providing humanitarian and development assistance to the developing world. Although the PVOs registered with USAID vary markedly in size, scope, and capability, they share a strong commitment to improving the quality of life for people in developing countries.

In its work overseas, the PVO community demonstrates the traditional American values of pluralism, voluntary action, and concern for others. PVOs foster sustainable self-help efforts at the community level and provide a direct channel for people-to-people programs that broaden the participation of the poorest citizens in the social and economic decisions that affect their daily lives, and ultimately influence the well-being of nations as a whole.

The humanitarian activities of the PVOs originated more than a century ago in response to natural disasters. As a result of their ability to respond quickly and effectively, PVOs emerged as leaders in disaster relief. Gradually, their efforts broadened from relief and emergency food distribution to development programs designed to address the root causes of poverty and vulnerability to disasters. This transition from short-term relief to long-term development programs strengthened the cooperation between USAID and the PVO community that has firmly taken root over the past two decades.

PVOs foster sustainable self-help efforts at the community level and provide a direct channel for people-to-people programs...

While continuing to respond to human needs in emergency situations, PVOs have increasingly contributed their resources to sustainable development activities that are crucial to helping people in the developing world to improve their quality of life. Resources provided by PVOs promote economic growth that is broad-based and sustainable and ensures a safe environment. PVOs also foster human capacity development, particularly through the attainment of health and education levels required for all citizens to contribute to, and benefit from, economic development. The work of these voluntary agencies also encourages pluralism and the emergence of democratic institutions.

A Shared Basis for Collaboration

PVOs pursue their objectives through active involvement in areas such as micro-enterprise development, environmental protection, child survival and child welfare, family planning, democratic institution building, food security, and humanitarian assistance. These areas are also priorities for USAID's programs and serve as the foundation for its partnership with the PVOs.

Advancing towards the end of this decade, USAID continues to place emphasis on programs that build strong, free-market economies, address the role of the informal sector and foster the growth of micro-enterprises. Priority is also accorded to programs that protect the environment for future generations, while bringing about economic development and an equitable sharing of resources. USAID also encourages programs that help fledgling democracies around the world, while ensuring that the trend toward citizen involvement and democratization is sustained. In addition, new efforts that combine humanitarian and development assistance are becoming increasingly important in USAID's programs. Such efforts are preventing crises and bridging the continuum from short-term relief to longer-term development. PVOs have the skills and experience to contribute to each of these priorities in significant ways, including the development of innovative approaches to address emergency relief and development problems.

* CDO is included hereafter under the generic term PVO.

Recognizing the Voluntary, Independent Nature of PVOs

USAID views PVOs as its development and relief partners, both as intermediaries for USAID programs and as independent entities in their own right. USAID is committed to working with PVOs in both capacities. The Agency recognizes that by joining forces and complementing each other's capabilities and scope, USAID and PVOs can accomplish more together than either could alone.

One of the challenges inherent in such a partnership is the achievement of the right mixture of collaboration and independence between public and private spheres. A healthy degree of separation between the two is essential for the integrity of each, but cooperation is also critical to the vitality of both.

In keeping with this principle and the "privateness requirement" legislated by Congress, USAID requires that in order to be eligible for grants from development assistance funds, PVOs must register with USAID and show that at least 20 percent of their annual financial resources for their international programs come from non-U.S. Government sources.

U.S. PVOs received annual private support worth $4.8 billion, more than 3 times the support received from USAID worth $1.4 billion.

Leveraging Private Resources for Development

PVOs make a vital contribution to USAID's foreign assistance programs. As data presented in this report indicate, the private resources devoted to international development by the PVO community exceed their U.S. Government support. For the 1997 Voluntary Agency Report, registered U.S. PVOs received annual private support worth $4.8 billion, more than 3 times the support received from USAID worth $1.4 billion. Other U.S. Government Agencies and international organizations provided an additional $1 billion to bring the total support and revenue to $7.2 billion. For a detailed breakdown of support and revenue sources, see the Summary of Activities and Privateness Percentages Section.

New Policies and Simplified Procedures Strengthen USAID/ PVO Collaboration

USAID has committed itself to a major, Agency-wide reform of its operating systems. This process of reengineering strives to improve development performance by emphasizing core values and simultaneously simplifying administrative procedures and eliminating unnecessary layers of bureaucracy. The Agency has adopted four core values: an emphasis on achieving results in all Agency activities; direct participation of and feedback from USAID's ultimate "customers," those citizens of developing countries who benefit from USAID's work; teamwork, including strengthened partnerships with PVOs and other development partners; and the empowerment of stakeholders, including greater accountability for the use of resources.

Consistent with these reengineering principles, a joint USAID/PVO Task Force produced a new USAID/PVO Partnership Policy Paper in 1995 that will reshape and strengthen USAID's longstanding partnership with the PVO community. This policy paper highlights the importance USAID places on consultation and dialogue with PVOs on a broad range of matters, from policy and program strategy to activity design. It reinforces the commitment by USAID and PVO partners to the promotion of broad-based, equitable participation by host country organizations and peoples in the development process. In addition to a new emphasis on achieving results, it promotes more effective program integration of USAID funded PVO activities into USAID's strategic plans and objectives at the country level. Transparent, open communications between USAID and its PVO and CDO partners are also stressed in this new guidance. Results-oriented programs that involve cost-sharing, on a flexible and case-specific basis, are the anticipated outcome of a strengthened USAID/ PVO partnership.

USAID's complex administrative procedures have tended to hinder the achievement of shared development objectives. Thus, over the past year, USAID has simplified procedures ranging from PVO registration to grant administration. The introduction of these changes will allow PVOs to focus on the achievement of development results rather than on the completion of unnecessary paperwork. For example, the Agency has cut by two-thirds the documents required for PVO registration. Simpler procedures have made it easier to obtain approval for overseas travel, and PVOs now have more latitude in the implementation of grants and cooperative agreements.

Building Local Capacity and Strengthening Civil Society

To more effectively pursue its sustainable development objectives, USAID is committed to strengthening the involvement of grassroots actors in the development process and to enhance the growth of civil society. Announced by Vice President Gore at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, USAID's "New Partnerships Initiative" (NPI) is a direct outgrowth of the Administration's commitment to "putting people first." NPI stresses the role of nongovernmental actors in organizing citizens for the pursuit of common goals and responsible civic action in partnership with local government and business. It highlights the importance of a deepening involvement of a broad range of stakeholders, particularly women, in these development processes.

Through NPI, USAID is able to combine its extensive grassroots development experience and recent management reforms with an expanded notion of development partnership. NPI emphasizes society-to-society linkages and strengthened partnership — both among local groups and with their regional or U.S. counterparts, and between USAID and a variety of developmental partners. Working closely with PVOs, USAID is operationalizing NPI's intent by strengthening and promoting increased collaboration among these local institutions, including indigenous nongovernmental organizations, competitive small businesses, and democratic local governments.

USAID's "New Partnerships Initiative" (NPI) is a direct outgrowth of the Administration's commitment to "putting people first."

NPI underlines the increasing importance of the work U.S. PVOs have initiated with their nongovernmental organization partners overseas. In recent years, the commitment of PVOs to building the capacities of their indigenous partners in the field has become a hallmark of many of their programs. U.S. PVOs are increasingly offering training, technical assistance, and support to local affiliates and community organizations at the grassroots level to strengthen the ability of these organizations to carry out their own technically sound, effective development activities. PVO programs that build capacity at the grassroots level reflect the intent of NPI; so do programs that improve the enabling environment to ensure that local development initiatives are both permitted and encouraged.

USAID's Office of Private and Voluntary Cooperation: A Central Contact Point for PVOs and CDOs

USAID's support to its U.S. PVO and CDO partners comes from many different sources in the Agency, including USAID Missions overseas and regional and central bureaus in Washington. The Office of Private and Voluntary Cooperation (PVC) of the Bureau for Humanitarian Response (BHR) has a special responsibility as a central point of contact for PVO information, coordination, and document dissemination. PVC is also responsible for registering U.S. PVOs and local voluntary organizations with USAID, and houses the secretariat of the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid.

PVC, in coordination with regional and other bureaus within USAID, carries out programs designed to enhance the impact of USAID/PVO collaborative efforts by strengthening PVOs' planning, management and technical capabilities, allowing for more effective and sustainable programming at the local level. PVC provides this support through a number of grant programs, including matching grants, child survival grants, cooperative development and farmer-to-farmer program grants, development education, and the ocean freight reimbursement program.

Who they are and what they do

The rules governing the registration of nongovernmental, non-profit agencies engaged in voluntary foreign aid are promulgated in Part 203, Chapter II, Title 22, Code of Federal Regulations. The registry consists of the following agencies.

FAX:(408) 920-9734
E-Mail:franramey@aol.com

Dr. Patricia Blair, President and BOD

Promotes peace and understanding through the exchange of ideas, information, and resources. ACTS has assembled local teams in five cities of the New Independent States, including Moscow and St. Petersburg, to develop a local leadership network of physicians, democratically-elected public officials, and non-profit organizations. These teams will implement and administer the management resource model, a systemic approach to problem-solving that emphasizes learning, leadership skills, and building infrastructure. The model consists of five phases: apprenticeship, beginning involvement, self-direction, program expansion, and outreach partners. With the assistance of donated services, ACTS also coordinates the transportation of humanitarian aid and the training of health-related personnel.

Mr. Michael Levett, President

Mobilizes the volunteer resources of the U.S. private sector to assist the development of market economies and democratic societies in Russia and Central and Eastern Europe. CDC's Enterprise and Economic Development program enlists senior-level volunteers from American business to provide on-site technical, management, and marketing assistance to private and privatizing small- and medium-sized businesses and business support institutions. The on-site assignment often serves as a platform for a continuing CDC support for enterprises and economic development that includes identifying and linking financing, partners, buyers, and suppliers with client companies both in the region and in the U.S.

Mr. Robert P. Stack, President and CEO

Provides governments with technical assistance in the areas of housing, employment, and education for persons with disabilities. CO Inc. was founded by people who saw the need for a contemporary corporation to explore innovative methods for supporting people with disabilities. The development of employment and housing opportunities for persons with disabilities is done through the utilization of rehabilitation technology, advocacy, and training. CO Inc. focuses on family support, consumer empowerment, and management training. The philosophical basis for these projects is that all persons, regardless of the severity of their disability, are entitled to self-determination; all persons can live in the community, and all persons who want to work should receive the support to do so.

Mr. Charles C. Post, Executive Director

Collaborates with host governments and other international development agencies to provide health programs to developing countries. The largest project is in the Amazon region of Brazil, in the State of Para. Volunteer American doctors, nurses, and dentists are sent several times each year for short-term rotations. Public health programs are constantly carried out in the nearby villages. The training component has several layers, including medical and nursing students and village-level rural health aides. Other projects in Bolivia, Africa, and Honduras are smaller, with no surgical/medical component. These projects emphasize health education and integrated development, including child survival. Teaching and assistance programs are underway in Mozambique and Guinea-Bissau.

Heals human hurts through relief and development programs. A necessary condition for development is to initially address the emergency needs of the hurting families and then to provide the technical assistance, training, and other material resources needed to help them develop sustainable, income-generating skills as relief needs abate. FMPI provides food, medical supplies, and emergency relief services to people suffering as a result of severe drought, flooding, famine, or natural disaster in the Philippines, Africa, and Central America. FMPI builds, operates, and supports child survival centers, schools, orphanages, and medical clinics. FMPI operates 94 food projects and a food cooperative volunteer program which addresses the rural hunger needs of Native Americans.

Mr. Scott C. Sabin, Executive Director

Works with small hillside farmers in the Dominican Republic and uses the Agroforestry Revolving Loan Fund to provide them with technical support, credit, and marketing services to plant income-producing trees on eroded hillsides. This program halts traditional slash-and-burn agriculture and allows poor farmers to become independent business persons and agents of reforestation. Degraded land is restored and farmers are able to greatly multiply the returns of their labor. As the loans are repaid, more farmers enter the program. Floresta has also established Los Arbolitos, a for-profit tree nursery that has produced over 15 million seedlings since 1986. Floresta is completing initial planning for a similar program in Oaxaca, Mexico.

FAX:(702) 746-4530

Ms. Karen K. Makoba, Executive Director

Provides the rural poor in Africa with credit for micro-enterprise development and education to improve family well-being. FOCCAS programs include specific strategies to promote community as well as individual and family development. FOCCAS works closely with Freedom from Hunger, an organization that developed a program model called Credit with Education—a tested poverty lending methodology that combines village banking with low cost non-formal education. Program participants borrow capital at affordable rates, build their productive assets, accumulate savings and learn life-saving health and nutrition practices. Credit with Education programs: 1) become self-financing, 2) achieve long term sustainability, and 3) achieve large-scale operations.

E-Mail:info@freefromhunger.org

Dr. Christopher Dunford, President

Develops innovative programs for eliminating chronic hunger by providing resources and information that empower families and communities to help themselves. To help the rural hungry in developing countries make choices that will move them beyond hunger, Freedom from Hunger supports programs that provide very poor women with cash credit through village banking for income-generating activities that are linked to participatory adult education. These "Credit with Education" programs, in turn, result in an overall improvement in health and nutrition, family planning, food production and storage, and better management of small businesses. Technical and financial support is provided to local organizations to help them develop and expand programs.

Mr. Donald B. Leka, Executive Director

Contributes to Albania's fledgling market economy by addressing its initial needs for technical and business skills. The Foundation has restructured a prototype educational program for the secondary Technical School of Tirana, Albania and has established an associated Business Development Center (BDC). The aim is to train mid-level technicians and sub-engineers who are necessary for the country's economic development and to familiarize them with basic management practices. The BDC, a key component of this project, has introduced a continuing education program centered on business English and management. It is also starting an information and resource service.

FAX:(510) 652-6013
E-Mail:ussascp@igc.apc.org

Ms. Anne M. Poirier, National Coordinator

Promotes international understanding between the United States and South Africa through education, while providing relief for poor and distressed communities in South Africa. For the past seven years, INSA's sole project, the U.S.-South Africa Sister Community Project, has linked American cities to disadvantaged black South African townships. The transition that INSA has been making--from an anti-apartheid organization to an organization supporting the reconstruction and development of South African communities--mirrors the recent profound process of political change taking place in South Africa itself. INSA supports communities engaged in the process of both recovering from decades of apartheid brutality and meeting new development changes.

Rev. Colonel V. Doner, COB and CEO

Improves the lives of poor people worldwide by providing food, water, clothing, and health care. Special emphasis is on care of orphans and children in war-torn regions. Projects focus on providing both physical and emotional support as well as education and vocational training. Thousands of children and their families benefit from our Child Feeding Programs, Child Immunization Clinics, and Medical Clinics in Africa, and Central America. Hygiene seminars aim to prevent spread of disease. Water Projects in Africa provide clean, disease free water to communities. Small Family Business Enterprises in Central America promote self-sufficiency. ICRF distributes donated medical supplies, clothing, and vegetable seeds to communities throughout the world.

Mr. Russell Sturm, President

Accelerates the global adoption of energy-efficiency policies, technologies, and practices in order to enable economically and ecologically sustainable development. By conserving energy, the countries can meet rising demand for energy services at a much lower cost, allowing them to focus on economic and social development. IIEC acts as facilitator between those institutions with experience implementing energy efficiency and those institutions in developing countries with the need for such an expertise. IIEC builds capacity within developing countries to implement their own energy-efficiency programs. IIEC works at three different levels: development of energy policy; design and implementation of efficiency programs; and capacity-building through training and education.

Mr. Russell R. Fletcher, Executive Director

Selects, trains, and supports indigenous community organizers working in twelve nations to facilitate the grassroots development of impoverished persons. This nondirective work is process rather than project oriented. People begin to address existing barriers to their development as persons of inherent worth and dignity. They themselves develop solutions, evaluate results, and reflect on their own feelings and involvement in problem solving. A community organizer typically works in one village for some five years, raising the level of consciousness of persons who have been excluded from the decisions affecting their lives. The result has been a transformation of the quality of life in whole communities, and spontaneous replication in neighboring areas.

Mr. Steve Kirk, Executive Director

Contributes to educational development and cultural exchange by placing volunteers to teach in developing countries. In China, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Lithuania, Namibia, Poland, South Africa, and Thailand, over 275 volunteers every year teach English, math, science, and environmental education to people in rural villages, quiet towns, and bustling cities. Teachers must have a bachelor's degree for most programs. As volunteers, the teachers pay or fundraise a fee to cover the cost of airfare, health insurance, field support, training, and administration. Deadlines for applications vary. Volunteers are provided with housing and a modest stipend in most cases.

The private and voluntary organizations (PVOs) presented in this report vary in size from several thousand dollars to several million dollars in support and revenue from private contributions, U.S. Government, international agencies, and in-kind donations.

For the past several years, the Foreign Assistance Appropriations Act has included the following provision regarding private and voluntary organizations (PVOs):

None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act for development assistance may be made available to any United States private voluntary organization, except any cooperative development organization which obtains less than 20 percent of its total annual funding for international activities from sources other than the United States Government.

The twenty percent requirement does not apply to:

- Non-U.S. PVOs,
- Cooperative Development Organizations (CDO), or
- Economic Support Funds (ESF), Disaster Assistance, or other non-Development Assistance (DA) sources of funding.
