Voices of librarians

"I am very happy that our library is no longer a quiet place as it used to be. Today, the library is a valuable lively community center, which doesn't only lend books but also offers access to technology, information and new opportunities for all ages. A year ago, we couldn't even dream about such a library metamorphosis. However, this is evidently possible."

Concurrently with the transfer of public services in an online format, the librarians can promote electronic services, and can connect and train the population in using them, in order to become engaged in civic activities and interact with government officials.

The data were collected from the monthly reports completed by the libraries included in the Novateca network during April-October 2013, among computer users.
