The U.S. Independent Sector as it Relates to South African Initiatives

INTRODUCTION

Purposes of this volume

This publication provides a map of the activities of the U.S. independent (or nongovernmental) sector as it relates to South Africa. It shows the capabilities of organizations in this sector and their relationships with their partners or offices in South Africa. The publication's purposes are twofold. It hopes 1) to promote networking and sharing of information and 2) to increase effectiveness of development initiatives in--or about--South Africa, based on a common knowledge base of financial and technical resources.

Background

The South African Information Exchange (SAIE) is a privately funded project of the Institute of International Education (IIE) in New York. The IIE is the oldest, largest, international educational exchange institution in the United States. Among the programs that it administers are the Fulbright student scholarships and the South African Education Program (SAEP) scholarships. The latter, jointly with the Johannesburg-based Educational Opportunities Council, has provided advanced study in the United States for black South Africans since 1979.

The SAIE, created in 1986, has researched, published, and disseminated 24 publications in the almost seven years that it has been active in democratizing access to information about South Africa-related resources. Used by both grant-makers and grant-seekers, these directories promote responsible funding applications, create networking opportunities, reduce duplication and waste of scarce resources, and further the sharing of expertise, ideas, and experience. (Editions in print are listed on the back cover.)

This year, the SAIE has devoted itself to two new volumes. They consolidate all the information it has collected in its database over the years and are a culmination of its efforts. This one presents the various components of the U.S. independent sector that are engaged in some way in South Africa-related initiatives. The other, a companion piece due in August 1993, will provide brief, clarifying information on the donor community in South Africa. Over the life of the project we have looked at various U.S. constituencies--and at South African donors--piecemeal. These two volumes are the largest single directories we have ever attempted.

Methodology

First, what were the criteria for choosing the targets for this U.S. survey? It was to represent the range of entities making up the independent sector in the United States supporting South Africa-related initiatives. We used the names of all the people who have been added to our database over the years--through requests for information about South Africa or for our publications, participants' lists at South Africa-related conferences and workshops, annual reports of funders, referrals by colleagues in the U.S. and elsewhere, and, most significantly, all the respondents identified for previous U.S. surveys. It is essential to note that the organizations in our database are not all funders, but diverse members of the U.S. nongovernmental sector.

We wrote personal letters to over 1,000 individuals in our database coded as representing different kinds of nongovernmental organizations, including the corporate social responsibility offices of corporations. Our sole mechanism for updating the information in our database is to rely on those persons who receive our periodic mailings (three or four a year) to send us changes and deletions. This rarely happens, and so the data becomes outmoded very quickly.

To accommodate in one volume all of the information we were seeking, the format of the request had to be brief. The one-page questionnaire that we sent is reproduced here:

Questionnaire

Please circle type of organization:

Foundation	Private and voluntary organization (PVO)
University	Trade union (or trade union service organization)
Religious organization	U.S. support organization (501(c)(3))
Advocacy group	Research/public policy/professional group
Corporation	Other (please specify) _____

Please specify main areas of program interest or program funding (if applicable) in priority order:

- 1.
- 2.

Please specify any area that you do not/cannot fund (if applicable) :

Please list trustees (and affiliations, if appropriate):

Please indicate the size of your organization's budget in relation to South African initiatives:

___ under $100,000 ___ $100,00 to $500,00 ___ over $500,000

Please give contact information for your organization:

Name/title:	Organisation:
Address:
Tel:	Fax:

If you have an office or partner organization in South Africa, give contact information:

It was difficult to design a single form, easy to complete, for soliciting information from the various constituencies in our database, given their disparate purposes. The definitions for "type of organization," for example, are overlapping and often duplicative.

In using the word "foundation" without refining it, we raised some definitional questions. In lay terms, there are two subsets of 501(c)(3) organizations (designated thus by the U.S. Internal Revenue Service) that can receive tax deductible donations from the public--private foundations and public foundations. A "private" foundation receives its support from one or a small number of significant donors and is subject to many restrictions (e.g., it pays tax on its investment income); a "public" foundation has broad support from many different donors, none of which gives so much or is so big as to stand out from the rest. (For further information on legal and tax questions: Jack Janetatos, Baker & McKenzie, 815 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20006, tel. 202 452 7006; fax. 202 452 7074.)

In the process of trying to define and delimit the different constituencies in the United States, we divided the public foundations into two further subsets: "private and voluntary organizations (PVOs)" and "U.S. support organizations." In our working definition, the former are, typically, nonprofit development agencies that offer technical assistance to NGOs in third world countries, often with the financial support of USAID; the latter are, typically, incorporated for charitable or educational purposes in the United States to raise funds for foreign charities that are the equivalent of 501(c)(3)s.

Soliciting information from the universities on our mailing list raised some additional complexities. We were trying to identify some nontraditional models of cooperation--e.g., institutional linkages--beyond scholarships. Many of the universities in our database participate in IIE's South African Education Program and are listed as such in the IIE SAEP brochure printed annually. Some of those institutions did return our questionnaire, but the number of SAEP-participants in this volume does not reflect the total.

Providing the question "does not fund" was important for two reasons: to allow those organizations that are not funders to so stipulate and to enable funders to protect themselves from inappropriate requests and applications. This directory is in no way a "shopping list" nor a mailing list for scatter-shot fundraising campaigns.

Results

The first mailing of letters and questionnaires in the late fall of 1992 elicited about 100 positive and about as many negative responses. The reasons given for the respondents not wishing to participate were as follows:

Those who wished to stay on the mailing list but were not willing or felt it was not appropriate to participate (14); wished to be removed from the mailing list because are no longer involved or already received too much mail or otherwise found it irrelevant (13); did not wish to be listed but didn't specify removal from list (7); are planning involvement but are not active yet or are reviewing program goals (6); thought the request was only for funders or otherwise misunderstood purpose (5); interpreted the letter as a request for funds (4); have no operations/programming in SA (4); already participate in the SAEP (3); their SA affiliate does social responsibility programming (3); rarely fund and do not want to raise expectations (2); do no international grantmaking (2); do not accept unsolicited proposals (1); does not want to be inundated with unnecessary paperwork (1); SA program is defunct for lack of funds (1); and envelope returned (1).

We sent a follow-up mailing in February 1993 to all those who had not yet responded, including a draft table of contents of current respondents by organizational type, and received another 60 or so positive responses. The final sweep was done by telephone, through which personal contact we elicited another 90 or so completed questionnaires, as well as a great deal of new information for our database about changes in personnel, addresses, and telephone/fax numbers. Many of the people to whom we had regularly been sending copies of our publications were no longer at the organization.

The breakdown of types of organizations represented in the total of 249 participants is:

Universities/colleges (52);
U.S. support organizations (49);

C

- Private and voluntary organizations (44);
- Private foundations (21);
- Churches (20)
- Advocacy groups (16);
- Research/public policy/professional organizations (15);
- Corporations (11);
- Public foundations (9);
- Media groups (6);
- Company-sponsored foundations (4);
- Trade unions/trade union-related (2).

The financial statistics that emerged should be interpreted with caution, since many of the institutions listed in the directory derive their funds from other organizations also listed therein. For annual budget figures related to South African activities, the amounts given total a roughly estimated $44,700,000. Thirty-nine organizations did not answer this question. The breakdown is as follows:

- | | |
|------------------------|---|
| - Under $100,000 | 138 organizations at about $75,000 each or about $10,350,000; |
| - $100,000 to 500,000 | 41 organizations at about $350,000 each or about $14,350,000; |
| - Over $500,000 | 30 organizations or well over $15,000,000; |
| - $5,000,000 | 1 organization or $5,000,000. |

A detailed subject index offers a guide to about 70 main program areas in which participants are involved (and hundreds of subheadings; e.g., the heading "Education" has about 65 subheadings). There is also a glossary to help readers with some of the unfamiliar acronyms.

Conclusions

In what we consider the most interesting and helpful aspect of the directory, we found that, of the 249 respondents, 110 have at least one office or partner in South Africa. This is surely a statistic that would not have been true even a year ago.

The information contained in this directory will soon be "on line" in South Africa, available through the Southern Africa Nongovernmental Network (SANGONet), which represents a merger between WorkNet and the Development Resources Centre (DRC) in South Africa. Individuals wishing to learn more about SANGONet may get in touch with the South African Information Exchange in New York or with the DRC (P.O. Box 6079, Johannesburg 2000, tel. 011 838 7504; fax. 011 838 6310).

We are aware that there are omissions in this directory. These omissions are both inadvertent and inescapable in such a project, where maintaining a constantly evolving database of this size is a challenge. We deeply regret any omissions. The fact that we had to elicit the final information for this directory by telephone might be a sign of lack of interest on the part of some respondents or due to mail and faxes not being received. More likely, the explanation lies in the heavy workload and travel schedules of people engaged in international development activities and we are grateful to those who took the time to cooperate.

While a directory of this kind could never be considered "complete," we hope it will serve to bring together parties committed to development and social justice in South Africa who would otherwise not have found each other.
