I. Summary

The Agricultural Research Project is directed toward developing an effective agricultural research system in Tanzania with emphasis on food crops grown by small farmers. A Project Paper (PP) revision was approved by AID/Washington on December 15, 1977. The PP revision provided for an expansion of the project activities to include sorghum/millet research along with the maize and food legume research already underway. The PP revision increases the number of contract positions from five to eight and increases the life of project funding for participant training, commodities and other costs. The three new long-term project positions are for a sorghum/millet breeder, a sorghum millet agronomist and a production economist. A contract amendment was negotiated with TITA in February 1978 to provide the additional services.
