

FOREIGN EDUCATIONAL CREDENTIALS REQUIRED
FOR CONSIDERATION OF ADMISSION TO UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES IN THE UNITED STATES

Third Edition

Prepared by the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers for the Agency for International Development, Office of International Training

April, 1985

In June, 1964, the Agency for International Development (A.I.D.), Office of International Training, entered into a contract (now a cooperative agreement) with the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO) for professional assistance in achieving the most effective selection, admission, and placement of A.I.D. participants in U.S. universities and colleges. Since that time, more than 1,000 members of AACRAO, in approximately 500 institutions, have participated in the project.

The purpose of the current A.I.D. cooperative agreement with AACRAO is to augment AACRAO capabilities and activities regarding the admission, level of placement and enrollment of all students, including all foreign--and, hence, A.I.D. students--in U.S. universities and colleges in order to ensure a smooth transition from a foreign educational system to the U.S. system of higher education.

One of the project's regular, ongoing activities is the appointment by AACRAO of admissions officers and graduate deans to the Office of International Training for periods of two to three weeks each, throughout the year, to examine the qualifications of participants proposed for academic study. As a result, only participants for whom there is reasonable assurance of success in the fields of study proposed in the U.S. are submitted for placement in U.S. universities and colleges.

AACRAO has a membership of more than 7,400 registrars and admissions officers, representing more than 2,000 universities and colleges, and including all of the institutions where A.I.D. academic participants are placed.

PREFACE

This is the third, and expanded, edition of "Foreign Educational Credentials Required for Consideration of Admission to Universities and Colleges in the United States." The purpose of the publication is to assist AID Overseas Mission staff members and cooperating country personnel in determining the minimum academic records which should accompany the documentation of participants proposed for study in U.S. universities and colleges. This report should also be a valuable resource for foreign student admissions officers in U.S. universities, since it identifies, in a convenient and consistent form, the educational credentials which should be available for applicants from each of 180 countries.

Several steps were followed in the preparation of this report. The format was developed and reviewed by professional credential analysts from universities and colleges throughout the United States. Secondly, credential analysts were selected to prepare the list of documents required for applicants from each country. Assignments were made on the basis of experience with applicants from the countries concerned. A third stage involved a review of the listing of documents for each country by another credential analyst experienced in evaluating applications from that country. Each listing was then edited to assure clarity and consistency.

This report does not represent an official U.S. government position on the evaluation of foreign educational documents, nor does it represent agreements (or portions thereof) between the U.S. and any of the countries listed. It does represent the prevailing opinion and considered judgment of experienced foreign student admissions officers in U.S. universities. The section on "Suggestions for Use" gives guidelines for users of the publication.

We are deeply indebted to G. James Haas, Associate Director of Admissions, Indiana University-Bloomington, who served as editor of both the second and third editions of this publication, as well as contributing to the content. We are also deeply indebted to Hattie Jarmon, Education Specialist, Academic Advisory Service, Office of International Training, Agency for International Development, without whose leadership and advice this project could not have been completed, and to the following persons who prepared and reviewed the content:

SUGGESTIONS FOR USE

When a U.S. university or college reviews the dossier of a foreign applicant, a number of items are taken into consideration. The most significant item is the previous academic background of the applicant. The level of the programs followed, the content of the subject matter, the quality of the student's achievement, the breadth and depth of study, and the time normally required for completion of a program all come under study. It is, therefore, essential that all relevant educational certificates, degrees, and diplomas be presented along with supporting documents that show the individual subjects studied and the marks or grades received. Although all countries do not routinely issue transcripts similar to those found in the U.S., this type of information can usually be obtained if requested. Most U.S. institutions will not make admission decisions on the basis of certificates, degrees, and diplomas alone. The transcript portion of the record is also required.

The individual pages of this publication list credentials and other documentation that would be required for entry from a given country to a specified level of study. The country is identified in the upper left-hand corner of the page, and is followed by the three-digit AID identification number for the country. An individual applicant would need to have one or more of the documents listed for admission consideration. Secondary school completion documents should always be provided for those who may fall into the transfer credit category. All postsecondary documents should be provided for those who hope to gain admission at the graduate level.

Column one lists the two major levels of study in U.S. higher education: undergraduate and graduate. Each level is further divided: freshman and transfer at the undergraduate level; master and Ph.D. at the graduate level.

In column two, the certificates, diplomas, and degrees which should accompany applications for admission to each level are specified. In column three, supporting documentation required in addition to the certificates, diplomas, and degrees is described.

For programs that fall into the I(B) (undergraduate transfer) category on the lists, it is also desirable that syllabi of the programs be included with the dossier. While admission decisions can sometimes be made without the syllabi, the student's exact placement cannot be determined without this information.

The lists of certificates, diplomas, degrees, and supporting documents are not exhaustive in the case of many of the countries. Included are the most commonly seen documents. One should always exercise great care in assessing foreign academic credentials. In several countries, documents of the same name will appear at more than one level. To assist the reader in sorting these out, parenthetical remarks such as "earned after a three year program" have been added. To minimize errors in making assessments, a reviewer should take note of an applicant's birthdate to determine at what age a particular document was earned.

The latest information available has been used in preparing this publication. However, other new programs and documents may exist since changes are constantly occurring in the world's educational systems. Reviewers may also come across documents earned ten or fifteen years ago that are not included herein. A publication more pertinent to the period may need to be reviewed in such cases.

Copies of all academic documents should be certified. Three categories of guidelines have been utilized in the text in connection with certification: (1) Countries that normally issue their academic documents in English need only certify their usual copies; (2) countries that do not use the western alphabet should provide certified English translations; and (3) countries that use the western alphabet should be asked to provide certified copies of the original language documents, plus the certified English translations. Most of the countries fall into this third category. Copies in the original language are useful as a safety check on the translator for simple errors or for interpretive rather than literal translations (the latter can sometimes be quite misleading when grades or marks are "interpreted").

The reader is reminded that there is not unanimity on the handling of all documents listed herein. Some institutions have the capacity to admit a student with deficiencies. Others are unable to extend this consideration. It is hoped that this publication will assist each institution to find the most equitable way to advance the educational level of the individual applicant while maintaining the integrity of institutional standards.

When complete academic documentation is presented, the admission decision process can be greatly expedited and the student's level of placement more accurately determined. Working toward the smooth transition of foreign students into the U.S. system is a worthy goal for all involved in international educational exchange.

Associate Director of Admissions
