The 1998 Report of American Voluntary Agencies Engaged in Overseas Relief and Development lists private and voluntary organizations registered with USAID as of October 1, 1997.

U.S. Voluntary Agencies: A Strengthened Partnership

Introduction

This report presents a current picture of the work being carried out by 424 private and voluntary organizations (PVOs) and cooperative development organizations (CDOs)* that were registered with the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) as of October 1, 1997. The report is an annual snapshot of PVO program activities, showing the geographical and sectoral focus of their activities, as well as their support, revenue, and expenditures. There are web page and e-mail listings in the Registry section, as well as a new section for success stories. This year the Overview also includes a summary of the results of the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid's (ACVFA) 1997 assessment of the status of the USAID/PVO partnership.

Voluntary Agencies: A Tradition of Support for Humanitarian and Development Assistance

USAID recognizes the significant role that PVOs play in providing humanitarian and development assistance to the developing world. Although the PVOs registered with USAID vary markedly in size, scope, and capability, they share a strong commitment to improving the quality of life for people in developing countries. In its work overseas, the PVO community demonstrates the traditional American values of pluralism, voluntary action, and concern for others. PVOs foster sustainable self-help efforts at the community level and provide a direct channel for people-to-people programs that broaden the participation of the poorest citizens in the social and economic decisions that affect their daily lives, and ultimately influence the well-being of nations as a whole.

*CDO is included hereafter under the generic term PVO.

The humanitarian activities of the PVOs originated more than a century ago in response to natural disasters. As a result of their ability to respond quickly and effectively, PVOs emerged as leaders in disaster relief. Gradually, their efforts broadened from relief and emergency food distribution to development programs designed to address the root causes of poverty and vulnerability to disasters. This transition from short-term relief to long-term development programs strengthened the cooperation between USAID and the PVO community that has firmly taken root over the past two decades.

While continuing to respond to human needs in emergency situations, PVOs have increasingly contributed their resources to sustainable development activities that are crucial to helping people in the developing world to improve their quality of life. Resources provided by PVOs promote economic growth that is broad-based and sustainable and ensures a safe environment. PVOs also foster human capacity development, particularly through the attainment of health and education levels required for all citizens to contribute to, and benefit from, economic development. The work of these voluntary agencies also encourages pluralism and the emergence of democratic institutions.

PVOs have the skills and experience to contribute innovative approaches to address emergency relief and development problems.

A Shared Basis for Collaboration

PVOs pursue their objectives through active involvement in areas such as micro-enterprise development, environmental protection, child survival and child welfare, family planning, democratic institution building, food security, and humanitarian assistance. These areas are also priorities for USAID's programs and serve as the foundation for its partnership with the PVOs.

Advancing towards the end of this decade, USAID continues to place emphasis on programs that build strong, free-market economies, address the role of the informal sector and foster the growth of micro-enterprises. Priority is also accorded to programs that protect the environment for future generations, while bringing about economic development and an equitable sharing of resources. USAID also encourages programs that help fledgling democracies around the world, while ensuring that the trend toward citizen involvement and democratization is sustained. In addition, new efforts that combine humanitarian and development assistance are becoming increasingly important in USAID's programs. Such efforts are preventing crises and bridging the continuum from short-term relief to longer-term development. PVOs have the skills and experience to contribute innovative approaches to address emergency relief and development problems.

U.S. PVOs received annual private support worth $6.3 billion, more than 5 times the support received from USAID worth $1.2 billion.

Recognizing the Voluntary, Independent Nature of PVOs

USAID views PVOs as its development and relief partners, both as intermediaries for USAID programs and as independent entities in their own right. USAID is committed to working with PVOs in both capacities. The Agency recognizes that by joining forces and complementing each other's capabilities and scope, USAID and PVOs can accomplish more together than either could alone.

One of the challenges inherent in such a partnership is the achievement of the right mixture of collaboration and independence between public and private spheres. A healthy degree of separation between the two is essential for the integrity of each, but cooperation is also critical to the vitality of both.

In keeping with this principle and the "privateness requirement" legislated by Congress, USAID requires that in order to be eligible for grants from development assistance funds, PVOs must register with USAID and show that at least 20 percent of their annual financial resources for their international programs come from non-U.S. Government sources.

Leveraging Private Resources for Development

PVOs make a vital contribution to USAID's foreign assistance programs. As data presented in this report indicate, the private resources devoted to international development by the PVO community exceed their U.S. Government support. For the 1998 Voluntary Agency Report, registered U.S. PVOs received annual private support worth $6.3 billion, more than 5 times the support received from USAID worth $1.2 billion. Other U.S. Government Agencies and international organizations provided an additional $1.2 billion to bring the total support and revenue to $8.7 billion. For a detailed breakdown of support and revenue sources, see the Summary of Activities and Privateness Percentages Section of this report.

New Policies and Simplified Procedures Strengthen USAID/PVO Collaboration

USAID has committed itself to a major, Agency-wide reform of its operating systems. This process of reengineering strives to improve development performance by emphasizing core values and simultaneously simplifying administrative procedures and eliminating unnecessary layers of bureaucracy. The Agency has adopted four core values: an emphasis on achieving results in all Agency activities; direct participation of and feedback from USAID's ultimate "customers," those citizens of developing countries who benefit from USAID's work; teamwork, including strengthened partnerships with PVOs and other developmental partners; and the empowerment of stakeholders, including greater accountability for the use of resources.

Consistent with these reengineering principles, a joint USAID/PVO Task Force produced a USAID/PVO Partnership Policy Paper in 1995 that has helped to reshape and strengthen USAID's longstanding partnership with the PVO community. This policy paper highlights the importance USAID places on consultation and dialogue with PVOs on a broad range of matters, from policy and program strategy to activity design. It reinforces the commitment by USAID and PVO partners to the promotion of broad-based, equitable participation by host country organizations and peoples in the development process. In addition to a strong emphasis on achieving results, it promotes more effective program integration of USAID funded PVO activities into USAID's strategic plans and objectives at the country level. Transparent, open communications between USAID and its PVO and CDO partners are also stressed in this guidance. Results-oriented programs that involve cost-sharing, on a flexible and case-specific basis, are the anticipated outcome of a strengthened USAID/PVO partnership.

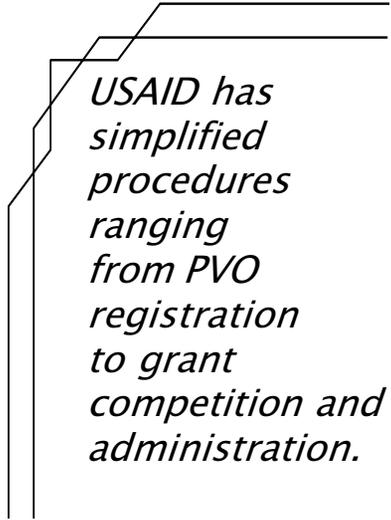

USAID's complex administrative procedures have tended to hinder the achievement of shared development objectives. Thus, USAID has simplified procedures ranging from PVO registration to grant competition and administration. The introduction of these and other changes will allow PVOs to focus on the achievement of development results rather than on the completion of unnecessary paperwork. For example, the Agency has cut by two-thirds the documents required for PVO registration. In May of 1997, USAID issued a New Policy for the Competition of Grants and Cooperative Agreements with Non-Governmental Organizations, developed with significant input from the PVO community. Finally, simpler procedures have made it easier to obtain approval for overseas travel, and PVOs now have more latitude in the implementation of grants and cooperative agreements.

With its new homepage at www.info.usaid.gov, the Agency is now more accessible to its partners. The Automated Directives System (ADS), formerly the USAID Handbooks, can be found at this site, along with recent press releases, the USAID telephone directory, and USAID's 1996 Yellow Book listing of USAID awards.

ACVFA Assessment Finds Stronger USAID/PVO Partnership

An assessment of the status of the USAID/PVO partnership was published in June 1997 by the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid (ACVFA), a Federal advisory committee that serves as a link between the U.S. Government and PVOs. Led by two independent consultants, with the oversight of a Joint ACVFA-USAID Steering Committee, the assessment team reviewed USAID's reengineered policies and procedures affecting the partnership. The team conducted a survey of all registered U.S. PVOs and all USAID Missions, and in-depth interviews with 136 USAID, PVO, and NGO staff in the United States and in 7 countries where USAID, PVOs, and NGOs cooperate.

The assessment found that the USAID/PVO partnership is significantly stronger today than it was four years ago. This was due in large part to the unprecedented series of reforms and other action taken by USAID over the past few years to improve collaboration with the PVO community. USAID and PVOs now share a more common development agenda, have engaged in constructive dialogue on foreign assistance programs, and have worked together to resolve administrative barriers to a more collaborative relationship.

USAID has simplified procedures ranging from PVO registration to grant competition and administration.

Among the specific findings highlighted in the assessment:

- ◆ There have been significant improvements in consultation and dialogue between USAID and PVOs. In some cases the increased dialogue has led to the perception of a more equal partnership and more productive and coordinated development work.
- ◆ USAID's efforts to simplify procurement procedures, improve efficiency, and to apply policies consistently have been appreciated and mutually beneficial, although the full impact of procurement reform has not yet been seen.
- ◆ Private and voluntary organizations have grown stronger in the recent past, and USAID has contributed to these changes. PVO and USAID staff agree that PVOs have improved in terms of operational and technical capabilities, but that improvements in financial independence have not been as pronounced.

There have been significant improvements in consultation and dialogue between USAID and PVOs.

While affirming a stronger USAID/PVO partnership, the study also found that reforms affecting the relationship are not yet being implemented consistently. Several other challenges remain: the need for more transparent USAID data on PVO funding levels and trends; improving USAID's relationship with smaller PVOs; and the need for more purposeful attention by all actors to the PVO and NGO program sustainability and financial independence.

A key conclusion of the study was that USAID should build on the impressive achievements of the past few years and stay the course on reforms, while shifting attention to communication of the substance of these reforms and to consistent Agency-wide implementation of intended practices. The full ACVFA report, An Assessment of the State of the USAID/PVO Partnership, may be obtained from the Office of Private and Voluntary Cooperation.

USAID's Office of Private and Voluntary Cooperation: A Central Contact Point for PVOs and CDOs

USAID's support to its U.S. PVO and CDO partners comes from many different sources in the Agency, including USAID Missions overseas and regional and central bureaus in Washington. The Office of Private and Voluntary Cooperation (PVC) of the Bureau for Humanitarian Response (BHR) has a special responsibility as a central point of contact for PVO information, coordination, and document dissemination. PVC is also responsible for registering U.S. PVOs and local voluntary organizations with USAID, and houses the secretariat of the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid.

PVC, in coordination with regional and other bureaus within USAID, carries out programs designed to enhance the impact of USAID/PVO collaborative efforts by strengthening PVOs' planning, management, and technical capabilities, allowing for more effective and sustainable programming at the local level. PVC provides this support through a number of grant programs, including matching grants, child survival grants, cooperative development and farmer-to-farmer program grants, development education grants, and the ocean freight reimbursement program.

Who they are and what they do

The rules governing the registration of nongovernmental, non-profit agencies engaged in voluntary foreign aid are promulgated in Part 203, Chapter II, Title 22, Code of Federal Regulations. The Registry consists of the following agencies.

Dr. Patricia Blair, President and BOD

Promotes peace and understanding through the exchange of ideas, information, and resources. ACTS has assembled local teams in five cities of the New Independent States, including Moscow and St. Petersburg, to develop a local leadership network of physicians, democratically-elected public officials, and non-profit organizations. These teams will implement and administer the management resource model, a systemic approach to problem-solving that emphasizes learning, leadership skills, and building infrastructure. The model consists of five phases: apprenticeship, beginning involvement, self-direction, program expansion, and outreach partners. With the assistance of donated services, ACTS also coordinates the transportation of humanitarian aid and the training of health-related personnel.

Provides agricultural assistance to Armenia through educational, scientific, humanitarian, and charitable endeavors. ATG helped to rebuild Armenia's infrastructure and assist private farmers during the transition period to a free-market economy. Its in-country staff of 75 local employees include office personnel, agronomists, agro-engineers and veterinarians. Projects include wheat trials, seed reproduction and processing, farm equipment, animal and public health, agricultural production credit, reforestation, and greenhouses. ATG is working to secure animal feed and increase dairy production. Contributions to ATG are used to purchase seed, equipment, and medication.

Mr. Roger Bouwma, Director, International Services

Promotes permanency planning for children, first within their own country and culture or through international adoption if this is not possible. Our philosophy is: provide development support to existing programs in the country or partner to develop a new program that assists children and families and prevents institutionalization of children. Bethany provides counseling services, temporary foster care, and medical care and works in partnership with the government to ensure continuation of the program when Bethany's work is completed. Bethany pursues these goals through educational partnerships with universities, sending volunteers to the field, hiring qualified indigenous people, and providing local training programs.

Works to improve the quality of life in developing countries by fostering the use of sustainable energy for rural development. Enersol's solar-based, rural electrification model is a socio-technical approach, which makes solar energy available and affordable to rural people for household electrification and community water pumping. Enersol fosters the establishment of local enterprises that sell, install, and maintain solar-electric systems, while helping local organizations integrate energy initiatives into their development and lending activities. In addition to operating field programs in Honduras and the Dominican Republic, Enersol assists other renewable energy activities throughout the world and conducts research and educational activities.

Enables the poor to free themselves from poverty. Now in its 11th year of service, Enterprise supplies technical resources, training, and capital to indigenous partner agencies; these agencies then provide training and loans to qualifying nationals for micro-enterprise start-up and expansion. The loan payback rate is over 90 percent. Loan capital is then re-loaned within the community, creating opportunities for others to establish or grow their own small businesses as well. Those once destitute are empowered to overcome poverty and its hunger, inadequate housing, lack of education, and ill health. Enterprise programs have served over 35,000 families in over 40 countries and the U.S.

Focuses on improving the socio-economic status of Black Americans, increasing their influence in the political and public policy arenas, and facilitating the building of coalitions across racial lines. JCPES helps Black Americans participate fully in the political and economic life of society, in part, by developing and conducting training and technical assistance programs for Black American leaders holding elective and appointed office. Its international efforts are principally in Africa and center on democratization, governance, and human rights; most of its program development involves some type of policy and/or democratic initiative platform. In 1992, JCPES co-sponsored an international conference that provided a neutral forum for open political debate.

Provides humanitarian assistance to people in distress in the developing world, in the form of clothing, medicines, and hospital supplies, in addition to sending medical personnel to distress areas. In 1996, physician members of the MMTF met with representatives of various foreign countries to plan and develop future humanitarian programs. Also in 1996, MMTF distributed toys to the poor children living in the marginated suburbs of Port-au-Prince, Haiti and Lima, Peru. MMTF provided donated medicine, small medical equipment and supplies to clinics that care for the poor in Nicaragua, Haiti, and Peru. These donations were delivered by MMTF's physicians who traveled to these countries to personally assess the needs of the people and to provide updated medical information to the local doctors.

Mr. Russell R. Fletcher, Executive Director

Selects, trains, and supports indigenous community organizers working in twelve nations to facilitate the grassroots development of impoverished persons. This non-directive work is process rather than project oriented. People begin to address existing barriers to their development as persons of inherent worth and dignity. They themselves develop solutions, evaluate results, and reflect on their own feelings and involvement in problem solving. A community organizer typically works in one village for some five years, raising the level of consciousness of persons who have been excluded from the decisions affecting their lives. The result has been a transformation of the quality of life in whole communities, and spontaneous replication in neighboring areas.

Mr. Peter J. Reitz, Executive Director

Enhances the quality of life of the people of the hemisphere by engaging NGOs and private sector leaders in the development process. Created in 1962, today PADF supports broader, more effective citizen participation in processes of political decision-making by increasing opportunities for civil society organizations to influence the formulation, implementation, and oversight of public policy at local and national levels. Interaction between citizens and state, locally and nationally, is key. PADF projects, whether training civil society organizations, helping municipal leaders obtain equipment necessary to fulfill their responsibilities, or helping the private sector with its image enhancement programs, are all part of the process of building sustainable development and eliminating mistrust, fear, and suspicion.

Fights blindness worldwide through health education and hands-on training for health personnel. Since 1982, ORBIS has held over 360 training programs in 76 countries. Programs take place either inside the ORBIS aircraft, a DC-10 jet converted into a fully-equipped eye surgery hospital and educational facility, or in local hospitals. Each week, visiting faculty members join ORBIS' 25-member medical team to share their skills with host-country colleagues. ORBIS builds the relationships with an array of programs which help developing countries become self-sufficient in the endeavor to eradicate unnecessary blindness. In 1996, ORBIS opened its first permanent ophthalmologic training center in Taiyuan, Shanxi Province, China.

Provides business training material, psychological encouragement, and conditional seed capital of $100 to help families or groups of very poor, unemployed, or underemployed people to start or expand micro-enterprises. Trickle Up's micro-enterprise program is implemented on a voluntary basis by local partners, or coordinating agencies—mainly indigenous, nongovernmental organizations engaged in development work. The agencies identify grantees, disburse the capital, and offer business guidance and support. Since 1979, Trickle Up has created opportunities for more than 282,000 entrepreneurs in Asia, Africa, the Americas (including the U.S.), and Europe. In 1996, Trickle Up helped start 6,748 micro-entrepreneurs in 51 countries.

Mr. Steve Kirk, Executive Director

Contributes to educational development and cultural exchange by placing volunteers to teach in developing countries. In China, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Lithuania, Namibia, Poland, South Africa, and Thailand, over 275 volunteers every year teach English, math, science, and environmental education to people in rural villages, quiet towns, and bustling cities. Teachers must have a bachelor's degree for most programs. As volunteers, the teachers pay or raise funds to cover the cost of airfare, health insurance, field support, training, and administration. Deadlines for applications vary. Volunteers are provided with housing and a modest stipend in most cases.

Summary of Activities and Privateness Percentages (1996)

The private and voluntary organizations (PVOs) presented in this report vary in size from several thousand dollars to several million dollars in support and revenue from private contributions, U.S. Government, international agencies, and in-kind donations.

For the past several years, the Foreign Assistance Appropriations Act has included the following provision regarding PVOs:

None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act for development assistance may be made available to any United States private and voluntary organization, except any cooperative development organization which obtains less than 20 percent of its total annual funding for international activities from sources other than the United States Government.*

The twenty percent requirement does not apply to:

- ◆ Non-U.S. PVOs,
- ◆ Cooperative Development Organizations (CDO), or
- ◆ Economic Support Funds (ESF), Disaster Assistance, or other non-Development Assistance (DA) sources of funding.

CDO Cooperative Development Organization

n/a Newly registered PVOs using 1997 financial statements

n/o No overseas programs

The Privateness Percentage computation is based on overseas expenses reported by the PVO on its financial statements. This percentage excludes expenses for USAID-initiated activities.*

ew for 1998, this section is a random sampling of success stories reported by PVOs who have support from the Office of Private and Voluntary Cooperation (BHR/PVC). These success stories are illustrative of USAID's many partners and reflect the diversity of efforts conducted in developing countries.

Success Stories of U.S. Voluntary Agencies

Aga Khan Foundation U.S.A
-India-

The Aga Khan Foundation U.S.A. (AKF USA), through its Junagadh and Sidpur Health Systems Development Project (JSHSD) in India established 13 health centers, 2 medical centers, 2 diagnostic centers, and 2 pathology labs, serving 75,549 people. The results included: 85 percent immunization coverage of children 1 year of age; 4 percent decrease in malnutrition among children under the age of 3 (29 to 25 percent) over the past year; 91 percent of pregnant women monitored by project staff; 52 percent of the deliveries institution-based; and 37 percent increase in curative care attendance from health awareness campaigns.

Brother's Brother Foundation
-Worldwide-

Since 1988, the Ocean Freight Reimbursement Program has enabled the Brother's Brother Foundation to implement its Books Across the Sea Program, which has distributed 8 million books, magazines, and other educational materials to more than 12 million students in 37,000 schools.

OPPORTUNITY International, Inc.
-Zimbabwe-

OPPORTUNITY International has created and now coordinates 58 micro-enterprise partner agencies in more than 110 urban centers in 27 countries. OPPORTUNITY works with key volunteer business and community leaders to develop and support indigenous NGO development organizations with the goal of reaching programmatic and financial viability in 3 to 5 years. In Zimbabwe, OPPORTUNITY's partner, "Zambuko Trust," has rapidly increased its loan portfolio and has become a leader in micro-enterprise finance. From 1993 and through 1999, the Trust increased its number of loans and total lending value more than ten-fold; made over 22,000 loans totaling approximately $3.7 million with a repayment rate of over 95 percent; and, provided underserved groups with access to credit, 73 percent of whom were women. The Trust began with operations in two cities and the project's success enabled it to open offices in all 8 provinces of Zimbabwe within 5 years. Because of its size, Zambuko Trust can now explore various financial market opportunities to scale up its operations to meet the ever-growing demand of micro-entrepreneurs on a sustainable basis.

Partners of the Americas
-Panama-

In Panama, over a three-year period, ten volunteers provided advice and training to the El Cano women's cooperative, producers of bulk jelly. Volunteers with expertise in small enterprises and industrial engineering helped the women to improve their business skills and identified appropriate ways to upgrade machinery and production methods. These innovations allowed the cooperative to buy in bulk, preserve their product, and efficiently cook their jellies. Additional assistance helped the cooperative to identify a new regional supplier of a superior quality pectin at a better price; increase the production of pineapple products by 100 percent and guava products by 130 percent; procure funding for a mini-van to rapidly transport their products to bakeries, rather than relying on slow, crowded buses. The project helped the women triple their 1993 profits to gross over $75,000 in 1996, broaden their market, and eliminate dependency on other enterprises for production. Up from approximately 70 percent control, they now have 100 percent control of their processing.

TechnoServe, Inc.
-El Salvador-

In El Salvador, TechnoServe focused on developing the capacity of local cooperatives and institutions to increase rural employment and income generation. TechnoServe used a community-based enterprise model that concentrates on bolstering established, medium-size private sector organizations that have a reasonable prospect of becoming financially viable. The project is having a visible, positive impact on the economic and social welfare of the participants. Members are managing cooperatives more effectively, increasing production and creating more jobs. The project has helped families achieve incomes of $5,000 per year compared to the $600 per year for families not participating in the project. In Lajas, one of the cooperatives has been distributing a dividend of $2,000 per member per year. Economic improvements have translated into better housing, education, and health services for cooperative members.

Winrock International Institute for Agricultural Development
-Uzbekistan-

Winrock International Institute for Agricultural Development (WI) increased and stabilized food production and distribution in the New Independent States (NIS) by providing training on post-harvest processing, marketing, and distribution. Volunteers successfully assisted the Chirchik Private Farmers Association in Uzbekistan to apply for and receive a $10,000 loan for 10 member farmers from Mercy Corp International to purchase potato seed and gasoline. They also assisted the association in setting up a revolving loan fund for members and establish by-laws and a management structure for the fund. The association leader has since used this training to help three other farmers to obtain loans. Volunteers helped the association explore joint marketing opportunities and advised the farmers on the export potential of almonds. In its first year of operation, the group sold 70 tons of bitter almonds to Silk Road Fruits, a joint Uzbek/U.S. venture, the first time that private farmers have been able to directly export their products outside the government or collective farm system.

World Council of Credit Unions, Inc. -Guatemala-

The World Council of Credit Unions (WOCCU) provided the Guatemalan national credit union with technical assistance in credit union computerization to handle increased volume with efficiency, reduce delinquencies, and lower the costs of the lending process. In addition, the project assisted credit unions in tailoring lending to the increasing needs of micro-entrepreneurs. As a result, loans have increased approximately 85 percent from $25 million in 1994 to $46 million in 1996; real growth of savings nearly doubled from $22 million to $40 million. With a 65 percent growth in the number of credit union members in two years, a cooperative development grant has provided almost 172,000 micro-entrepreneurs increased access to credit.

World Emergency Relief -Jamaica/Romania-

World Emergency Relief (WER) supplied medical equipment and supplies for a new clinic and small hospital operated by International Faith Missions in an area previously without access to medical care. Seeds, agricultural material, educational items, and clothing have made life easier in a WER-assisted refugee camp in Jamaica. With income earned from selling the excess produce from donated seeds, refugee families were able to buy pigs for food and income. Since 1991, WER has shipped more than thirty, 40-foot containers to Romania to support its multi-sectoral community development project, one of Central Europe's most successful efforts. Over 90 percent of the funding for this project has come from non-government sources in the U.S. The shipments have supported the establishment of a local Chamber of Commerce; more than 130 small businesses; the upgrading and improving of the local hospitals; the improving of local schools and libraries; and the equipping of a model farm, which produces an average of $1 million in local farm sales each year.

World Vision Relief and Development, Inc. -Malawi-

World Vision Relief and Development, Inc., (WVRD) is implementing a community-based child survival project in 172 villages in rural central Malawi, which have a combined population of about 50,000. Services are being delivered to some 11,000 women of childbearing age and over 9,000 infants and children under the age of 5. Between 1993-1996, the project has improved immunization coverage among 12 to 23 month-old children (89 percent for DPT3 and 87 percent for measles, both up from a previous 70 percent); increased the percentage of children exclusively breast-fed during the first four months of life from 5 to 45 percent; and, improved the availability of modern contraceptives and increased birth-spacing from 3 to 41 percent among mothers not wanting more children in the next two years.
