Academic Advisory Council for Thailand

The Academic Advisory Council for Thailand (AACT) was established to provide the Mission of the Agency for International Development in Thailand with a permanent and regular source of advice from the academic community of the United States. It is constituted of a council of specialists on Thailand from a number of disciplines and universities, and, in principle, all academic specialists willing to help in marshalling advice and information appropriate to the requirements of the Mission.

AACT is unique in that it is directly related to an operating Mission and therefore brings the academic people into direct contact with the programs and planning of foreign assistance. This unique character has its counterpart in a division for research and evaluation in the Thailand Mission that is designed to provide research support to programming activities.

AACT was developed through the efforts of the Southeast Asia Development Advisory Group (SEADAG) as part of the response to the call of the report, AID and the Universities (The Gardner Report). AACT was established in 1966 by invitation to the membership and by signing a contract between AID and UCLA to provide staff support. The members of the Council have changed from time to time but at present are: Lauriston Sharp, Chairman (Cornell); David Wilson, Executive Secretary (UCLA); William Bradley, Rockefeller Foundation; Peter Gosling, University of Michigan; Charles Keyes, University of Washington, Michael Moerman, UCLA, Frank Moore, Stanford University; Paul Trescott, Southern Methodist University; Fred von der Mehden, Rice University; David Wyatt, Cornell University.

AACT hopes to accomplish several things: (1) to make the knowledge about Thailand accumulated by the academic community over the years available to the US/AID Mission in a useful form; (2) to make reports and publications of the Mission available to the academic community; and (3) to develop a convergence of academic research with programs operating in Thailand to the mutual benefit of both.

The address of AACT is: David A. Wilson, Academic Advisory Council for Thailand, University of California, Los Angeles, California 90024.

PREFACE

When the Academic Advisory Council for Thailand was established it was conceived as a means of linking academic interests in development in Thailand with actual development activities. There is information of potential use to both scholars and officials in various special collections of material related to Thailand's development, a substantial portion of which is not published. The publication of, "Some Bibliographical Resources on Development in Thailand," is the outcome of a preliminary survey of such collections by the AACT Secretariat at UCLA. We hasten to publish it, even though it remains rather sketchy, so that both scholars and persons involved in assistance may know of the information now available.

Since 1966 the Academic Advisory Council for Thailand (AACT) has served the Mission of the Agency for International Development in Thailand as a permanent and regular source of advice from the American academic community. During this period, members of AACT have made available to the academic community various reports and publications of the Mission and, in turn, have made the knowledge about Thailand accumulated by the academic community available to the US/AID Mission in a useful form.

This work has led to an investigation of bibliographical resources on Thailand which have been collected by various governmental and non-governmental agencies in the Washington, D.C. area. An inventory of these resources has been prepared for academic specialists with appropriate research interests.

The holdings of several libraries and information centers have been examined and a listing of their contents has been reproduced in this report. The report also directs your attention to other sources of bibliographies and indices containing research materials on Thailand. In these cases, the report has summarized the type of materials they contain.

Finally, the reports and papers actually held in the office of AACT are listed.
