Foreign Assistance to South Africa: A Directory

Introduction

Purpose of the publication

The South African Information Exchange (SAIE) is a privately-funded project of the Institute of International Education in New York. The SAIE has been collecting, publishing, and disseminating information about South Africa-related resources since 1986. The 26 working papers in the SAIE series have covered information on North American, European, and South African organisations.

This new directory focuses on foreign assistance to South Africa. It is an updated and expanded version of previous work that the SAIE has published on European NGOs and on Canadian NGOs in 1991 and on foreign mission funding and on intergovernmental organisation initiatives related to South Africa in 1992. It includes official U.S. assistance, but not the U.S. independent sector, which was thoroughly reported on in a directory in June 1993. It also includes other OECD countries not represented in the original editions.

The purpose of this activity--and, indeed, all of the SAIE publications--is to democratise access to information about development resources for South Africa. These include financial, informational (policy and research), and technical (human) resources. A further goal is to facilitate communication and linkages among organisations engaged in similar initiatives with regard to South Africa; to foster new dialogue among South African development organisations and those in southern Africa and other countries; and to strengthen South African NGOs by enabling them to establish relevant relationships with donors and other NGOs.

Methodology

The organisations targeted for this survey were those that had been surveyed previously, in the studies listed above, as well as organisations from other OECD countries that we had collected from various sources for our database. In addition to focusing on NGOs, our approach was to invite the relevant ministry in each country to provide information about its development assistance to South Africa and the contact information for its mission in South Africa. Because we had recently (June 1993) surveyed the U.S. independent sector, we included official U.S. development assistance in the directory but not the U.S. private sector.

The SAIE sent a personal letter and questionnaire to about 450 organisations in its database in early October of 1993. The one-page questionnaire asked basic questions: type of organisation; programme (and/or funding) interests; what it does not fund (if applicable); annual budget related to South Africa; contact information for headquarters; and contact information for office or partner in South or southern Africa (if applicable).

The first mailing yielded about 80 affirmative responses, listing about 40 offices or partners in South or southern Africa, and about a dozen negative responses. We faxed a copy of each entry as it would appear on the page to each respondent, seeking changes and final approval to publish.

A second solicitation was mailed in mid-December to the organisations not yet heard from. This mailing included another letter, a copy of the original questionnaire, and a preliminary table of contents of the respondents thus far. This effort yielded another 80 or so respondents with about 50 partners or offices in South or southern Africa and about 10 negative answers. About 20 envelopes were returned to sender during the whole exercise.

After printing out a list of the remaining 245 or so organisations, the SAIE began faxing or in some cases telephoning individuals to attempt to elicit the required information. This produced another 60 or so responses. The intent in all of these directories is not to leave out any organisation that wishes to participate. There is considerable room for error because we are not always advised of changes in addresses, telephone, and fax numbers and we may not always have reached the intended party.

Results

The final number of participating organisations is 217 from 21 countries, with 118 of the participants listing offices or partners in South or southern Africa, for a total of 335 entries.

The breakdown by type of organisation is as follows (some respondents ticked more than one):

- Voluntary--61;
- Church group--30;
- Fundraising support--22;
- Government--20;
- Intergovernmental--20;
- Channel for funds--19;
- Advocacy group--14;
- Technical assistance--14;
- Private foundation--12;
- Research/public policy/professional group--13;
- Trade union (or trade union service)--11;
- International--9.
- "Other:"
  - Information agency--4;
  - International development--4;
  - Business--3;
  - NGO--3;
  - Network for NGOs--3;
  - Academic institution--2;
  - Documentation/communication--2.

And one each: information on South Africa; social action; membership; humanitarian organisation specialising in emergencies; nonprofit organisation for international staff development; private political foundation; association of municipalities; volunteer sending development agency; Christian humanitarian research & development organisation; multilateral information exchange on education in Africa; Catholic Church-based development support; and evangelical interdenominational relief and development agency.

The types of organisations shown above illustrate that the publication does not concern itself solely with donors. Many of these organisations provide other kinds of services.

For program and/or funding interests, the highest priority was given to the following programme sectors:

- Development--75. This sector represents the largest number of respondents. It breaks down into the separately listed but overlapping categories of capacity-building/human resource development (28); community development (12); rural development (12); development (11); economic development (7); and urban development (5).
- Democracy--64. This sector breaks down into the separately listed but overlapping categories of human rights (25); democratisation (20); legal issues (14); and civil society (5).
- Education--47. There were 32 sub-categories under this heading.
- Health--34. Health (19); environment (8); water (7).
- Information/communication/media--28.
- Gender issues/women--16.

Annual budget related to South Africa:

- Under $100,000	59 organisations or about $5,900,000;
- $100,000 to $500,000	53 organisations or about $18,550,000;
- $500,000 to $1 million	13 organisations or about $9,750,000;
- Over $1 million	49 organisations or more than $49,000,000.

Some organisations did not answer this question because they are not yet authorised to spend money in South Africa or because their funds are channelled through another organisation. While these figures are interesting, a total would not be meaningful because it would involve double counting (e.g., many NGOs raise funds from funding sources listed or are channels for funds) and because, for some, "over $1 million" means considerably higher than that.

Reasons given for not participating

In some cases, organisations did not want to participate because they understood the questionnaire to be aimed only at funders. When we wrote back clarifying the purpose of this publication, they were then able to respond. Of the 180 or so organisations that chose not to participate, 28 took the trouble to write to explain that:

- Their mandate does not extend to South Africa--8;
- They have closed down--5;
- They do not want to publish so as to avoid funding applications--4;
- They are not able to complete the form--5;
- They are now a political party--3;
- They do not support projects overseas--2;
- They are too small--1.

Conclusions

In carrying out this survey, a few themes emerged:

- Even though they are greatly appreciative of the product, many people find it difficult to complete and return a form, even of the most basic type.
- There is a reluctance to participate in exercises in which people fear being importuned by professional or other fundraisers.
- Looking at the list of nonrespondents, one can surmise that some anti-apartheid, advocacy, and information groups related to South Africa are no longer in existence.
- From the ten countries previously surveyed, there are 26 new entries; from the countries not included previously (Australia, Austria, Japan, New Zealand, and Spain) there are 28 entries.
- Because a major goal in conducting this survey is to facilitate networking among groups involved in development initiatives, the new information on the 118 groups that list partners or offices in South or southern Africa is an important contribution to the literature.

In sum

To make its information as accessible as possible, this publication, like the other SAIE working papers, is online on SANGONeT, the computer-based communications and information network based in South Africa. The postal address for SANGONeT is P.O. Box 31, Johannesburg 2000, tel. 011 838 6943, fax. 011 838 6310. The street address is Longbank Building, 13th floor, 187 Bree Street, Johannesburg. For more information on ordering SAIE publications, please refer to the back cover.

We want to convey our profound thanks to the organisations that participated in this survey and our apologies to any organisations that we have inadvertently omitted. The SAIE alone is responsible for any errors. We hope all our readers, whether participants or not, find the product valuable.

This publication is the last in the SAIE working paper series to be sent free of charge to the SAIE mailing list of about 2,500 people around the world. Its preparation and dissemination are made possible by the support of the private U.S. foundations listed on the overleaf to the title page. We acknowledge once again our gratitude for their sponsorship.

While we have not as yet tried to assess systematically the effect of these publications (an evaluation form is enclosed with this publication), we know from the outpouring of support in the form of thank-you letters and reorders from readers that the books have been well received and used.
