The Donor Community in South Africa: A Directory

PREFACE

With the publication of this directory of donors active in South Africa, the South African Information Exchange (SAIE) signals the end of the initial phase of its work and the beginning of a new era of cooperative directory information services. With its consultative style, the SAIE has been a pioneer in donor directory services related to South Africa. In my view, the SAIE's director, Ann McKinstry Micou, has virtually defined the field of donor directories in South Africa.

The SAIE has done so in four ways:

- First, SAIE directories set the standard for accuracy and thoroughness.
- Second, the SAIE has evolved a "transparency" in its working methodology that gives those included in the directories every opportunity to portray themselves accurately.
- Third, SAIE directories are persuasive on the question, "Why be in this directory?" A quick scan of the index of the present volume yields literally scores of organisations that never would have consented to being included in a publication of this kind were it not for the SAIE's intelligence and persistence.
- Fourth, and to me the most important, SAIE directories have included ever more--and more useful--information about the organisations listed.

The significance of the achievement goes beyond the practical usefulness of the directories--and they are very useful indeed--but rather should be recognised as a major, if highly specialised, contribution to the democratisation of South African society. In the United States, where the SAIE is based, democratic laws require donor organisations to report in precise detail to whom they distribute funds, and how much. This information is a matter of public record and is systematically translated by specialist NGOs into user-friendly publications for grant seekers.

No such legislation exists in South Africa, where a lack of democratic culture and a habit of less-than-public grant-making permeates some donor organisations. Through careful argument and superior work products, the SAIE has gradually persuaded some donors to become more forthcoming in describing themselves and their work "for the good of the public." Essential to this process was the realisation that in sharing more about what they could and could not fund, the donors were not losing their autonomy or prerogatives, but rather entering into an increasingly productive public policy discourse about the best use of scarce resources. In participating in this discourse, they become better donors.

The Development Resources Centre (DRC) has been privileged to provide some assistance to the SAIE in completing this volume. During our two years of existence, the DRC has drawn inspiration, support, and practical guidance from the SAIE. We announce, with this publication, a more formal cooperation between the SAIE and the DRC that also involves other South African NGOs working in the field of information about development resources. In fact, twenty-two South African organisations have formed an association called the Directory Information Services Collective for Development (DISC), of which SAIE plays a pivotal role as our major (and only) international member.

DISC is founded on the premise that it is possible to build comprehensive development information services through formal and systematic cooperation among agencies specialising in information. Through 18 months of research, planning, and negotiations, DISC members have arrived at a set of mechanisms and initiatives to realise our aims. Over the next two years, we intend to ensure that no grassroots development initiative anywhere in South Africa will have difficulty finding free information that might assist that initiative in its work.

With this publication, the SAIE and its growing number of partner organisations in South Africa move beyond the days of individually produced hard-copy publications. This new strategic cooperation to build comprehensive nonprofit information services includes the following services: responses to requests for information by telephone, walk-in, and post; hard-copy directory publications; computer print-outs from the national DISC Directory; and "online" access to directory information on the nonprofit information and communications network, SANGONet.

In working to realise our new vision for cooperative and comprehensive information services for development, we would be well advised to rely, as we long have, on the example and leadership of the SAIE.

The Donor Community in South Africa: A Directory

INTRODUCTION

Purpose of this publication

This publication (the 26th in the SAIE's series of Working Papers) provides a brief and basic map to the funding interests of the donor community in South Africa--as well as a clear statement of the areas the donors cannot fund.

Background

The South African Information Exchange (SAIE) is a privately funded project of the Institute of International Education (IIE) in New York. The IIE is the oldest, largest, private international educational exchange organisation in the United States.

The SAIE has been active for almost seven years in democratising access to information about South Africa-related resources in the United States, Canada, and Europe, as well as in South Africa itself. Used by both grant-makers and grant-seekers, the directories it publishes promote responsible funding applications and the sharing of expertise, ideas, and experience.

This newest volume provides brief, clarifying information on the donor community in South Africa. It is meant to be a responsible, helpful catalogue of nonproprietary information about donors to guide grant-seekers, as well as other donors, to a new understanding of collaboration, coordination, and sharing of resources.

Our cooperating agency in South Africa for this working paper was the Development Resources Centre (DRC), a South African nongovernmental organisation (NGO) providing information, advice, training, and networking services to build institutional capacity among community-based and intermediary development organisations. In particular, we would like to thank Mokhethi Moshoeshe of the DRC, Director of Information Services, for his assistance.

The information contained in this directory will soon be "online" via SANGONet (the Southern African Nongovernmental Organisation Network), which represents a merger between WorkNet and the DRC. Earlier SAIE working papers are already available on SANGONet, which may be accessed locally in many countries around the world. Individuals wishing to learn more about SANGONet may get in touch with the SAIE in New York or with SANGONet at 15th floor, Longsbank Building, 187 Bree Street, Johannesburg (mailing address P.O. Box 6079, Johannesburg 2000; tel. 011 838 7504; fax. 011 838 6310).

Methodology

Most of the South African donors in our database had participated in earlier SAIE surveys and had been put on our mailing list during that process. These surveys were "U.S. Corporation Initiatives to Benefit Black South Africans," "U.S.-Related Corporate Trusts in South Africa," "Some Sources for Tertiary-Level Bursaries within South Africa," "Corporate Social Investment in South Africa," and "South African Trusts/Foundations." Other South African donors' names were collected from sources like annual reports of grantees, conference participants' lists, and the research of colleagues.

C

We mailed a questionnaire and accompanying letter in November 1992 to about 350 South African donors who had been placed on our mailing list over the years and to about 350 South African donors who were new to us and had not been receiving our publications.

The one-page form's optional questions gave donors the opportunity to define and delimit their programme interests and regional focus. The questionnaire is reproduced below:

The wording of the question about the "size" of the trust was not clear to some respondents. It meant--and was read by most to mean--the size of the annual distribution of funds. We used the word "trust" to mean source of donations even though many donors do not describe themselves as "trusts." The word "donor" is, in some cases, used to mean "financial organisation," as in a revolving fund.

We received about 80 responses to the initial solicitation for information. We followed up in person during a month's trip to South Africa in February 1993, after which we had collected 160 participants. Following that trip, we did a mailing to all those from whom we had not heard, sending another letter and a draft table of contents, listing the participants thus far. That garnered another 35 respondents or 195 entries. We returned to South Africa in May to follow up, again, in person, and netted another 54 entries for a total of 249. Another nine arrived thereafter, making a total of 258..

Each respondent received a fax with a draft of the entry as it would appear on a page of the directory, so that changes and corrections could be made and the respondent would know exactly how it would look when published.

Results

Of the 700 solicitations, 258 (37 percent) responded positively, 99 (14 percent) responded negatively, and the rest (about 50 percent) did not respond at all. Most of these last were in the second category of donors who did know us or our product. Of the total, 101 donors (or 40 percent) are "new," not having been included in earlier SAIE surveys.

Ninety-nine organisations sent letters or faxes explaining that they chose not to participate because they:

Do not wish to ; e.g., "no purpose would be served" (15); do not believe the request to be relevant; e.g., the entity was not a donor (13); were too small (12); are part of a larger group of companies whose parent was already participating (8); have already allocated their limited budget to specific charities (7); say the "trustees did not wish to" participate (7); are winding down or have terminated the trust or social involvement (7); do not want "publicity" (6); are already "inundated" with requests (5); say the state of the economy is forcing the company to curtail its giving (4); say the trust is "private" (4); limit their contributions to their employees (3); only give in-kind assistance (2); misunderstood the purpose; e.g., thought it was a request for funds (2); cannot respond because of "confidentiality" (1); do not need additional information on giving in South Africa (1); do not respond to questionnaires (1); are reevaluating their focus of support (1).

Some U.S. companies in South Africa declined to participate in this directory. The Signatory Association is the office in South Africa for U.S. companies (currently 54) that have signed the Statement of Principles. Perhaps they did not participate because they preferred to rely on the Association office for the assessment of potential projects and the dissemination of information about those projects. The contact is Mrs. Denise Buckle, P.O. Box 62280, Marshalltown 2107; tel. 011 880 1630; fax. 011 880 1632.

The 258 positive responses break down in the following way:

For "Type of Trust," there are:

- Direct corporate giving--96 donors;
- Corporate foundation/trust--46;
- Channel for funds--16;
- Individual will trust--13;
- Company not for gain--13;
- Individual inter vivos trust--11;
- Religious organisation--9;
- Foreign trust located in South Africa--10;
- Welfare organisation--9;
- Service club--5; and
- Other--12 (revolving fund; U.S. company; departmental private bursary fund; fundraiser for trusts; statutory fidelity fund; trust governing specific projects; teachers' union; community trust; development trust; development agency; corporate/community partnership; internal company trust).

- 2'

The "Size of Trust," meaning the amount contributed each year, varies from:

- Under R100,000 23 donors at approximately R75,000 or R1,725,000 ;
- R100,000 to 1,000,000 71 donors at approximately R500,000 or R35,500,000;
- Over R1,000,000 127 donors at well over R127,000,000.

Because of the way the question was phrased, this amount is not a real total (many of the donors "over R1,000,000" are considerably over that amount), it does show that a roughly estimated R164,225,000 is reflected in this sample of South African donors. Thirty-three donors did not answer that question.

In addition to the directory itself, made up of brief entries on the donors, there is a detailed subject index of 59 major subject categories, to guide the reader to donors' interests in such topics as:

affirmative action, the aged, agricultural development, the arts, business and industry (nine sub-categories), capacity building, career guidance, charities, child welfare, community development (12 sub-categories), conflict resolution, crisis aid/relief, culture, democratisation, economic development (seven sub-categories), education (35 sub-categories), employment (six sub-categories), environment (six sub-categories), feeding, gender issues, health (20 sub-categories), human rights, housing, legal aid, leadership, manpower development, relief, research, returned exiles, rural development, self-help, skills training, social justice, sport, training, urbanisation, water, welfare (ten sub-categories), and youth.

Conclusions

This is, to our knowledge, the first "foundation directory" (to use an American expression) ever to be published on South African donors. It represents a massive sweep of our database that probably will not be attempted again for some time.

Many donors with whom we spoke said they were intent upon not "publicising" what they were doing and that they did not want to be "inundated" with requests. Others said that they thought we were performing a great service to the donor community. We hope that the latter assessment turns out to be true.

When we undertake a directory of this kind, we enter into a relationship of trust with the donors that agree to participate. We therefore respectfully urge grant-seekers to use this publication responsibly. The fact that donors have agreed to be included does not in any way guarantee funding. This is not a mailing list. Once users have identified what they believe to be appropriate potential donors, they should write a letter of inquiry requesting further guidelines and funding criteria before sending a full-blown proposal.

The ultimate goal of an initiative like this is to bring people together who did not know about each other's development and relief efforts. This sharing of information could blossom into new relationships among development practitioners, new ideas and models, joint programming, greater capacity and confidence among grant-seekers, and increased service to those working in democratic participation and development.
